

Journal of Marriage and Family

Attending Religious Services Predictive of Fidelity

Other Dimensions of Religiousness Such as Praying and Faith Had No Association

Pasadena, CA – April 10, 2008 – A new study published in the Journal of Marriage and Family reveals that attendance at religious services predicts marital fidelity.

Led by David C. Atkins and Deborah E. Kessel of the Fuller Theological Seminary, the study explores how various dimensions of religious life, including prayer, closeness to God, faith, and religious activities related to infidelity.

Religious service attendance was the only unique, religious predictor of infidelity. Prayer, importance of religiousness, and strong reported faith were not predictors.

The authors believe that that attendance likely implies prevention of infidelity in the sense that it is a shared activity between spouses. Attending services can create a strong network of relationships within the church, synagogue, or mosque that can provide social support to the spouses. Also, attending services means that an individual is hearing religious teaching on marital fidelity and the general importance of marriage.

“Our study focuses the spotlight on religious service attendance with respect to this important aspect of marital life” the authors conclude. “It opens the door for a host of questions about why attendance might have this special association.”

The participants for this study were drawn from the 1998 General Social Survey (GSS) conducted by the National Opinion Research Center. The surveys consisted of structured, face-to-face interviews with questions related to religion and spirituality.

This study is published in the May 2008 issue of the Journal of Marriage and Family. Media wishing to receive a PDF of this article may contact journalnews@bos.blackwellpublishing.net.

To view the abstract for this article, please click here.

David C. Atkins is affiliated with the Graduate School of Psychology at Fuller Theological Seminary and can be reached for questions at datkins@fuller.edu.

A Publication of the National Council on Family Relations

The Journal of Marriage and Family (JMF) has been the leading research journal in the family field for over 60 years. JMF features original research and theory, research interpretation and reviews, and critical discussion concerning all aspects of marriage, other forms of close relationships, and families. For more information, please visit www.blackwell-synergy.com/loi/jomf.

Wiley-Blackwell was formed in February 2007 as a result of the acquisition of Blackwell Publishing Ltd. by John Wiley & Sons, Inc., and its merger with Wiley's Scientific, Technical, and Medical business. Together, the companies have created a global publishing business with deep strength in every major academic and professional field. Wiley-Blackwell publishes approximately 1,400 scholarly peer-reviewed journals and an extensive collection of books with global appeal. For more information on Wiley-Blackwell, please visit www.blackwellpublishing.com or <http://interscience.wiley.com>.

###

Unsubscribe: We received your name from a reputable media service. If you would rather not receive messages from Journal News about publicity in this subject area, please click here. If you would like to be removed from the media service, please contact Cision at info.us@cision.com.